Here's my quick list of things I'm interested in learning about heading into the trip:

1. Devonté Graham — In a leading role. We already know a great deal about Graham the player. He's a great shooter, a heck of a competitor and can handle the rock and play D the way Bill Self demands. But we haven't seen much of Graham as a leader just yet. Natural leadership seems to be a trait that Graham has an abundance of and the guess here is that he's just been waiting for his time to break it out. That time is now, and I'm sure we'll see plenty of it on this trip. How that will impact his play — and not whether or not he can do it — will be the most interesting thing to watch here. But I'll be shocked if Graham comes back to the United States with anything other than an A for his leadership grade during the trip.

2. The return of Udoka Azubuike — The big man is back and better than ever, according to teammates. Several Jayhawks have marveled recently at Azubuike's improved footwork, solid conditioning and general presence on both ends of the floor. Even if he only plays 20 or so minutes a game in Italy — which seems to be Self's goal for just about everyone on the roster — I think we'll see plenty of shining examples of the things we've only heard about up to this point. Last season, we saw glimpses of the force that Azubuike could become. This week, we'll get to see just how far along he is in that department.

3. The birth of Billy Preston — Self talked a lot about Preston on Sunday, one day before the Jayhawks hopped on the plane to head over the pond. And although he admitted that the freak freshman was not "ready" to make a major impact just yet, Self said Preston's play this week could go a long way toward proving he's getting there. So how can he get that done? Easy: effort. Preston is an extremely gifted basketball player, both in terms of skills and physical abilities, and he has the potential to be a difference maker for the Jayhawks as soon as this season. The best way for him to get there is to let it go and play loose and with incredible effort every minute he's on the floor. If Preston can forget about style points and worrying about what he's doing, he could show coaches that he's ready for the next step. Until then, the talented freshman will continue to be a work in progress, albeit one that any coach in America would love to be working on.

4. Transfer city — A month ago, this category looked a lot more comprehensive, with as many as six transfers expected to get their first real action as Jayhawks. That number is down to four now, thanks to Jack Whitman's departure and Dedric Lawson's suspension, but that doesn't mean it will be boring to track the transfers. For one, guards Malik Newman and Sam Cunliffe (second semester) will be eligible to play for the Jayhawks during the 2017-18 season. Both likely will have meaningful roles, with Newman potentially being one of the more important scorers on the roster. After that, though, we'll get a rare glimpse at the future, as well, with K.J. Lawson and former Cal point guard Charlie Moore also making their KU debuts.

Newman and Cunliffe figure to get more minutes than the other two, but seeing what skills each has, along with how the whole group works together, will be as noteworthy as anything both for today and the future.

5. Any surprises? — Each time one of these trips or long-distance tournaments happens, there are players who sleep up and show a little more than many people expected. This team has three prime candidates to earn that label when the trip is over: sophomore forward Mitch Lightfoot, junior guard Lagerald Vick and freshman guard Marcus Garrett. Here's how: With the departure of Whitman and the Jayhawks down to three eligible big men, Lightfoot's role becomes even more important than it already would have been. That's good news for Kansas, because such a role in reality is exactly what Lightfoot likes. Self has said throughout the summer that Lightfoot has been one of the hardest-working, better-looking players on the roster, and he has a chance in Italy to show that his improvement translates from practice and drill settings to games. Vick probably has the longest way to go to qualify as a true surprise, but there is room. He was solid in a supporting role last season, but the opportunity to take another step is there this year. Vick is confident and ever-improving — he wowed a handful of NBA scouts at an Under Armour camp this summer and has a chance to be a lot more like Josh Jackson than anybody believed was possible heading into last season. It will take some work. And the biggest jump he'll have to make is defensively. But Vick's a competitor and he's hungry.

KANSAS FOOTBALL

Prep receiver de-commits from KU

By Benton Smith
bsmith@world.com

The Kansas football team's 2018 recruiting class shrank by one commitment Monday evening, with Texas prep Tevaille Hunt announcing his decision to de-commit from David Beaty's program.

Rated a three-star wide receiver by Rivals, the 6-foot-2, 180-pound Hunt — entering his senior year at Texas High, in Texarkana, Texas — was the prep teammate of current freshman KU receiver Quan Hampton. Hunt committed to the Jayhawks on the day of the spring game, this past April, after attending the scrimmage at Memorial Stadium with Hampton.

"First off, I would like to say that this was a very long four months and a very hard decision to make," Hunt wrote in a note he posted on Twitter. "I want to thank all the Kansas coaches and the head coach for believing in me and giving me an opportunity to play at the next level."

According to Hunt's message, he has closed his recruiting process and will announce which college team he plans to play for this Friday night.

Scout.com reported since KU became the first Power Five team to offer Hunt a scholarship in mid-April, the receiver has since gained offers from TCU, Oklahoma State and Indiana, as well as some non-Power Five programs.

Gabe Brooks of Scout also reported Kansas "is still in the mix" for Hunt, though it seems highly unlikely a player would de-commit from a program only to re-commit to it four days later.

According to Scout, Hunt gained an offer from TCU after attending the team's July 21 camp.

With Hunt out of the mix, that brings KU's 2018 commitment list down to 12 players.

Based on Rivals' rankings, Kansas owns the 43rd-best recruiting class in the nation after losing Hunt.

Milan, two games in each city — we made the first trip to the land of the boot.

"It is kind of hard to believe it's here," Newman said. "But I'm excited about it. I'm glad it's here and I just can't wait to get on that plane. Whatever Italy has to offer, I'm ready to see it."

That includes the play of his teammates, who wrapped up their pre-Italy practices on Sunday before hopping on a plane.

Although Newman did not single out any specific player when asked who he was most looking forward to seeing, the 6-foot-3 guard admitted he was more than a little eager for the return of 7-foot center Udoka Azubuike.

"I'm very excited to see him play," Newman said. "I know he's excited about it. He had an injury so he had to take time off last year. But I know he's just excited about it as I am to get back on the court. ... We have a lot of new faces that we're depending on this year, and I'm kind of looking forward to seeing how everyone will play when it's us against someone else."

Asked how he thought Azubuike would do in his return to the floor, Newman did not hesitate to gush.

Alabama under decidedly different circumstances. He spent one semester in Tuscaloosa, headed into spring football No. 1 on the depth chart at right tackle, was demoted and then tossed from the team for the vague "violation of team rules," which translates to "none of your business."

Baldwin was ranked the No. 1 junior college tackle in the nation, so talent never has been the issue. He has good feet for a man who stands 6-foot-5 and weighs 305 pounds. It wasn't his feet that got him the boot from Alabama.

Kansas starts fall camp this morning. When camp ends, the player most capable of inspiring shades of relief in Baldwin. If he can bring a good attitude to practice on a daily basis and heed the warning of Gonzalez's dismissal that every athlete on campus should take seriously, then the developing offensive line has a shot to be adequate, despite its relative lack of experience. If Baldwin's same player Saban ran out of the program, things up front can grow scary in a hurry. It's not that the coaches have said anything bad about Baldwin. It's just that they haven't said anything. He's not a player they talk about unless asked.

This coaching staff, more than most even, finds a way to talk up players who bring winning attitudes to practice, to the classroom, to life. Hakeem Adeniji, Jacob Bragg, Antione Frazier, Larry Hughes, Mesa Ribordy, Hunter Saulsbury — those O-linemen consistently inspire praise.

Baldwin? Crickets. Baldwin has a chance to be held up as a positive example by showing up at practice every day with the goal of working harder than anybody at his position and taking care of every other responsibility heaped upon college football players. It's a lot to juggle. Does Baldwin have it in him? If the answer is no, then he doesn't want to play in the NFL, as badly as he thinks he does.
